Alignment: Evil
Nature: He will always go after an elf first and will never break off an attack if he is fighting an elf.

Long Sword: Powerful Blow

Pick any dice from d4 to d10.
Roll the dice twice.
The low roll is the synergy cost to perform a powerful blow.
The high roll is the bonus damage the blow will do if the blow hits.

Long Sword: Deflect Blow

Pick any dice from d4 to d10.
Roll the dice twice.
The low roll is the synergy cost to perform a deflection.
The high roll is the chance that the incoming blow may be deflected by the long sword (roll this or less on a d20).

Large Shield: Shield Bash

Pick any dice from d4 to d20.
Roll the dice twice.
The low roll is the synergy cost to perform a bash.
High roll equals the chance the shield bash will stun your opponent (roll versus a d20). Damage from a shield bash is 3d6+3 (plus the character's TKA). First you make a to-hit roll, then damage roll and then the chance to stun.
A character that takes no damage from a shield bash cannot be stunned by it. If a character is stunned by a shield bash he loses all remaining attacks on the current round of combat plus all attacks on the following round of combat.

Elf Eater

The Orc Elf Eater got his name because he likes to eat the flesh of the Elves he has just killed. At one point his companions did try to stick him with the name Elf Breath but that stopped abruptly when he killed one of them.

Elf Eater is brutish and tough but not overly stupid. He will always go after elves and if present, will not direct his attack against much else, unless actually forced. If it is apparent that he cannot get to an elf he has seen, he will actually break off the fight to resume it later. If he kills an Elf while in battle, he will want to eat a piece of its heart after the battle. This will not extend to Elves killed by other Orcs in a battle, just to the ones he kills.

His passion for killing Orcs is well known. Most Orcs that fight with Elf Eater will actually avoid killing Elves since they know Elf Eater will be pissed with them after the battle.
